FREDERIC H. SMITH
Major General, U. S. A.

Commanding Antiaircraft Center, Camp Davis, North Carolina

Born May 30, 1879, in Troy, Ohio. Appointed to the United States Military Academy in 1899. Was graduated in 1903 and assigned to 30th Battery, Field Artillery. Assigned to Coast Artillery in 1906, serving with it (except for World War I period) until his promotion to Brigadier General. Promoted to First Lieutenant, 1907; Captain, 1911; Major (temporary), 1917; Major, Regular Army, 1920; Lieutenant Colonel, 1926; Colonel, 1934; Brigadier General, 1937; Major General (temporary), 1940; Major General (permanent), 1941. During World War I was assigned as Battalion Commander, then Regimental Commander of the 306th Field Artillery, 77th Division. Was in France from March, 1918, to February, 1919. Was graduated from the Coast Artillery School Field Officers Course in 1922; Command and General Staff School, 1923; Army War College, 1925.

Service includes duty as instructor at the United States Military Academy; three years as Assistant Chief Quartermaster, Panama Canal; two years on the Coast Artillery Board; two and half years as military attache to Turkey; two and half years as Adjutant General of the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

Commanded 69th Coast Artillery (AA) from 1931 to 1934. Was G-4 and acting Artillery Officer for the Panama Canal Department for one year; Chief of Staff at the same department for two years. Commanded Fort Monroe, Virginia, and the Coast Artillery School from 1938 to 1940. Before assignment to command of Camp Davis, commanded the VII Army Corps for seven months. Awarded the Purple Heart for "services in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive while serving as Lieutenant Colonel commanding the 306th Field Artillery."

O. L. SPILLER
Brigadier General
 Commandant, Antiaircraft Artillery School

Born at Jacksboro, Texas, on November 15, 1887. Was graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1909 and appointed Second Lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army, on November 30, 1910.

Promoted to First Lieutenant, July 1, 1916; Captain, May 15, 1917; Major, Temporary, July 3, 1918; Lieutenant Colonel, Temporary, November 7, 1918. Reverted to his former grade of Captain, March 20, 1920, and was promoted to Major on July 1, 1920; Lieutenant Colonel on August 1, 1935; Colonel on November 1, 1939; Brigadier General, Temporary, October 1, 1940.

He served with the 168th and 165th Companies, Coast Artillery Corps, Fort Monroe, Virginia. He attended the Mounted Service School, Fort Riley, Kansas, then was stationed at Fort Washington, Maryland; he sailed for the Philippine Islands November, 1914; returned to the United States in February, 1917, and served at Forts Strong and Standish, Massachusetts. He was a student and instructor at the School of Fire, Fort Sill, Oklahoma. His next duty was at Fort Banks, Massachusetts; then at Camp Meade, Maryland. During service with the A. E. F. in France, he was assigned to Headquarters, Army Artillery, and then as a student at the AA School. Upon return to the States, February, 1919, he became an instructor at the Coast Artillery School and director of the non-commissioned officers' school. He graduated from the advanced course of the Coast Artillery School in June, 1924. Was graduated from the Command and General Staff School, June, 1925, and went to duty in the office of the Chief of Coast Artillery. Was graduated from the Army War College in June, 1930, and served at the Aberdeen Proving Ground. He served again in the office of the Chief of Coast Artillery to August, 1936, when he was transferred to the Panama Canal Zone. He served at Camp George Washington, then as assistant to the Liaison Officer, New York World's Fair, Fort Totten, New York, 62nd Coast Artillery (AA), AATC, Fort Bliss, Texas. He was given command of the 39th Coast Artillery Brigade February, 1941. He was assigned as Commandant of the Antiaircraft Artillery School on April 7, 1942.

HISTORY OF CAMP DAVIS

Camp Davis is a youngster compared with many Army posts in the United States. Blazonry being designed for its organizations will bear no tokens of glorious achievements in other wars. But compensating for this newness is a freshness, the buoyant spirit of youth, the indomitable ambition of the pioneer, the desire to establish noble precedent. And for all its newness, Camp Davis has a military heritage. The men who are stationed here are, for the most part, citizen-soldiers, men who were called away from the assembly line, the plow, the school, the office, the store—called to man the breastworks of democracy, just as their forebears were in the days of Bunker Hill, Gettysburg and St. Mihiel. Down through the years American youth has not once failed to meet the challenge of those who would destroy the freedoms this country has so long enjoyed. This is the heritage of the Camp Davis soldier.

It was late in 1940, following passage of the Selective Service Act, that the War Department authorized construction of Camp Davis as a Coast Artillery training center to house 20,000 troops. The site chosen for the contonment was along U. S. Highway 17, opposite Holly Ridge, North Carolina, and 30 miles north of Wilmington. There was a crying demand for speed on the project as selectees by the thousands would soon be in need of housing and training facilities. Swiftly the wooded site was cleared, the first of 1,000 buildings mushroomed from the earth. Sleepy little Holly Ridge was rudely awakened. It boomed, and even now is known to the soldiers as Boom Town. Just five months and ten days after the first construction materials arrived on the site, the camp was completed under the original contract. The camp proper occupies 3,200 acres. A small arms firing range and two antiaircraft firing points are outside the main reservation, however, and occupy another 5,000 acres.

The camp was named for Major General Richmond Pearson Davis, who was born at Statesville, North Carolina, in 1866. During the World War I he commanded the 151st Field Artillery Brigade in France, and later was Chief of Artillery for the Ninth Corps. For his services in this command he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal.

In April, 1941, the first cadres arrived at Camp Davis. Seasoned soldiers from posts throughout the United States were sent here to assist in administration and training. Brigadier General James B. Crawford was in command. The first selectees came from Camp Grant, Illinois, in early May, and were assigned to the 93rd Coast Artillery, a new antiaircraft regiment, first to be activated at Camp Davis.

Before organization of the new regiments was well under way, the War Department announced that a Barrage Balloon Training Center and School, first of its kind in the Army, would be established at Camp Davis. The new unit was to have an authorized strength of 2,500 officers and men. Until establishment of the Training Center and School at Camp Davis, the United States Army Air Corps was in charge of developing the barrage balloon in this country. Effectiveness of the barrage balloon in the Battle of Britain led the War Department to set up the new balloon organization at Camp Davis.

Barrage balloon administration and training passed from the hands of the Air Corps to the Coast Artillery. Thus, after the Barrage Balloon Training Center and School was formed, Camp Davis held the distinction of being the only post in the country to have the three principal elements of Coast Artillery—antiaircraft, sea-coast defense and barrage balloon—under a single command. Colonel Robert Arthur, formerly in charge of the historical section of the Army War College, was named commandant of the Barrage Balloon Training Center, which was scheduled to be moved from Camp Davis to a permanent base at Paris, Tennessee, before 1942. In August, Major General Frederic H. Smith, Commanding General of the Seventh Army Corps, with Headquarters in Birmingham, Alabama, was placed in command of Camp Davis, and General Crawford was assigned to supervise the training program. The camp, attached to the First Army, is in the Fourth Corps Area.

Basic training is very much the same in every Army camp. First of all, the soldier must be taught the fundamentals of military courtesy and discipline. He must learn how to wear his uniform, how to police his living quarters, how to safeguard his health. Regardless of his branch of service, he must master infantry drill, learn not only the manual of arms, but how to shoot the rifle. Interwoven in the basic training were classes in subjects peculiar to the Coast Artillery, the mechanics of searchlights and directors, three-inch and 37-mm, antiaircraft guns, while the more advanced classes worked out problems with the 155-mm. guns. Soldiers assigned to the Barrage Balloon Training Center and School, in addition to their basic training, learned how to use the gas bags to force "enemy" bombers above effective bombing range.

The camp is unique in that its antiaircraft firing points are not on the main reservation. One is on the historic site of Fort Fisher, 50 miles south of the camp proper. During the Civil War, Fort Fisher guarded the mouth of the Cape Fear River which led from the Atlantic Ocean to the important port of Wilmington. At Fort Fisher there are 45 frame buildings, and flooring and siding for 316 tents. Units going to the old battle site for firing practice can remain for weeks at a time.

The second antiaircraft firing point is at Sears Landing, a narrow strip of land between the inland waterway and the ocean, four and a half miles east of Camp Davis. This latter point was completed after two months of arduous clearing, digging, dredging and building. It was necessary to build a road through the woods from the camp to Sears Landing. To facilitate traffic through the inland waterway, a retractable 75-foot steel barge was installed between mainland and landing. Because Sears Landing is but a short distance from, and easily accessible to, Camp Davis, only 22 buildings were constructed in the area.

Athletics play an important part in the morale program in any Army camp. Among the selectees in training here are former football, basketball, baseball and boxing stars. There are swimmers and tennis enthusiasts—in fact, every type of athlete. An athletic officer is in charge of arranging sports events. One of the first sports to receive attention was boxing, and some of the finest amateur boxers in the country participated in weekly shows. Softball and baseball are very popular in the summer months, football has its fling in the fall, and basketball is the winter favorite. With the ocean so near, it is a simple matter for the men to enjoy surf bathing. Motor convoys take hundreds of soldiers to the beaches each week-end during the summer months. Indoor sports events are staged in the field house. Although the various types of competition produce outstanding individuals and teams, the primary purpose of the athletic program is to keep every soldier, whether professional or rank amateur, in physical trim.

The chapels—there are eight of them—afford the camp populace ideal places of worship. Each chapel is built along the lines of a typical village church, spire and all, and has an electric organ and portable altar. One of these chapels can accommodate 353 men at a single service. The chaplains represent a variety of denominations—Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish—and the men are urged to attend religious services just as they did at home. Army officers are firm in the belief that religion is a keystone of morale.

Health of the soldiers must be safeguarded. To this end the government has built and equipped with the finest accoutrement available, the Station Hospital. There are 56 buildings to the hospital, all connected by enclosed corridors and walks. The United States Army for years has possessed an enviable reputation for proficiency in medical work. Physicians and surgeons on duty at Camp Davis are graduates of the leading medical schools, technicians are highly trained, and nurses, too, are accepted for military service only upon proof of training and ability.

Practically all of the buildings on the reservation are of frame construction; hence there is a need for a well-organized fire department. There are three fire stations on the post and each recruit is taught that prevention is as important as fire control. There are 4,000 fire extinguishers in the camp and if fire ever strikes Camp Davis will be prepared.

The Federal Government has spared neither money nor effort to provide excellent training facilities at Camp Davis, and 20,000 men have sacrificed both money and time to become soldiers—all for the purpose of defending America. When Camp Davis soldiers return to their civilian pursuits, they will treasure the experiences gained while serving their country.

the LIFE

of an OFFICER CANDIDATE

F O R E W O R D

The Staff and Faculty and the officer candidates of this school are all engaged in the great undertaking of providing commissioned officers for our tremendously expanding Anti-aircraft Artillery. Several thousands of graduates are already serving on far fields, along with our other fighting forces, with the common purpose of winning this war. Those now here will soon join them.

Our reward for the service we render in this war will be two-fold: first, there will be the satisfaction of defeating the forces of aggression and tyranny, and of re-establishing a world order in which men may live in peace and security; and second, we shall enjoy a wealth of worthwhile friendships established and the remembrance of stirring and significant events in which we shall have taken part.

Years hence this book will serve to recall to our memories names and faces of those with whom we have served, and so to enrich our store of memories.

HISTORY OF OFFICER CANDIDATE SCHOOL

Though barely past the stage of growing pains, the Officer Candidate Division of the Antiaircraft Artillery School at Camp Davis has developed into a potent training center for future officers. A written history must at this time be brief, for the school is too young to have accumulated an eventful past. The story of the school will be told in the future when the men who have received their commissions here prove their worth on the battlefronts of the world.

Plans for the school were made in peace time, but no one then knew to what a great extent the project would grow. Men who in civilian life were professors, butchers, clerks and laborers have gone through the 12-weeks course to emerge officers of precision and responsibility. The first class began at Fort Monroe, Virginia, in July, 1941. The Coast Artillery was then the parent of the Antiaircraft Officer Candidate Division.

On February 24, 1942, the school was moved, lock, stock and candidate, to Camp Davis where it has undergone a tremendous expansion. Here at Davis the school was incorporated as a division of the Antiaircraft Artillery School.

The present site of the school is well suited for the mass production of officers. The camp was built in 1941 at a cost of $20,000,000. More than 1,000 buildings cover the camp area, with many new ones being added each day. The camp covers 9,000 acres. The candidates have the use of an excellent firing point at Sears Landing.

Brigadier General Oliver L. Spiller is the respected commandant of the school. The Director is Colonel Harold R. Jackson. Colonel John H. Madison serves as Assistant Director. Lieutenant Colonel Herbert T. Benz is the Executive. Lieutenant Colonel Arthur H. Bender has the job of Supervisor of Instruction. The Secretary is Major John W. Melville.

Reports from Commanding Officers of distant posts prove that the Officer Candidate School is producing able and trusted officers. The work is strenuous and exacting but most of those who arrive for the initial week of their course leave camp 12 weeks later as Second Lieutenants. Many of them have had no more than a high school education but this has not hindered them from becoming officers. In future years when the history of this war is written, those officers who attended the Officer Candidate School at Camp Davis will have contributed much to make it a glorious history.

C A N D I D A T E S

It's a new chapter each Saturday at Camp Davis when a new batch of would-be officers unload in front of the barracks being emptied by the class that graduated the day before.

From all over the country they come, some non-coms of long standing, others mere privates, but all with at least three months of basic training. They gather together in their new surroundings and contemplate with awe the twelve work-crowded weeks that loom ahead of them.

Every man comes recommended by his commanding officer. The next weeks will see that his native ability, aptitude and leadership will be developed and polished so that he will be able to wear his new gold bars with assurance and with credit.

A R R I V E

He is welcomed by Colonel Bender as well as by barracks to be cleaned, forms to be made out, and in the case of non-coms, stripes to be removed and replaced by a small OCS insignia on their breasts.

O R I E

For the first few days he will think he's back at the Replacement Center. Drill, drill, mass calisthenics and more drill. Manual of arms, close order, the regulation routine of a soldier, plus. Ribbing from his superior candidates: "Hey, braceup, moreyet, moreyet." And inspection—the "gig list." If his bunk isn't made just so and the locker arranged to within an eighth of an inch, woe betide him. The inspecting officer tears up the bunk and dumps the locker and the resulting mess impresses on him the value of doing it right. He is officer material now and must be able to do things neater, better and to a higher standard than in his enlisted days.

N T A T I O N

A Day in an O. C. S.

From reveille to taps
his day is laid out for him . . . today it may be a class in gun assembly and emplacement; tomorrow it may be problems in logistics; the night may find

the Life of Candidate

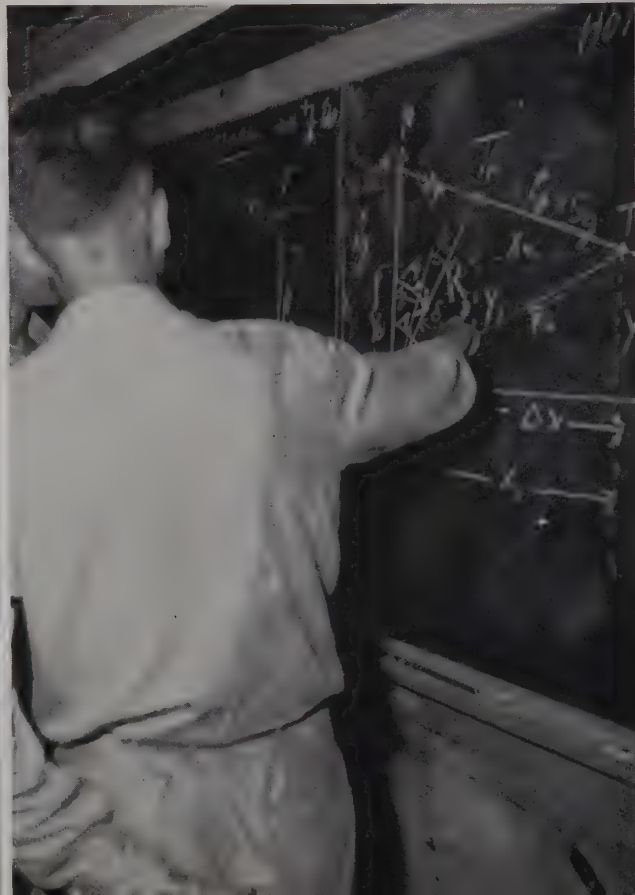

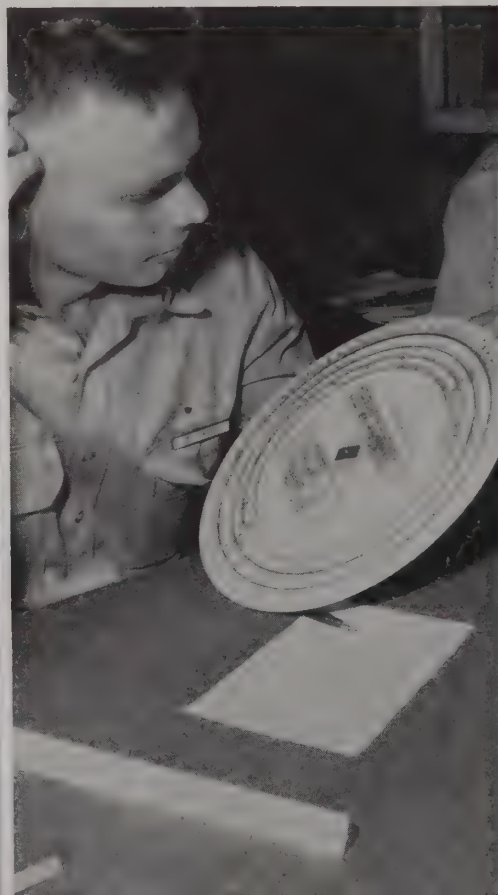

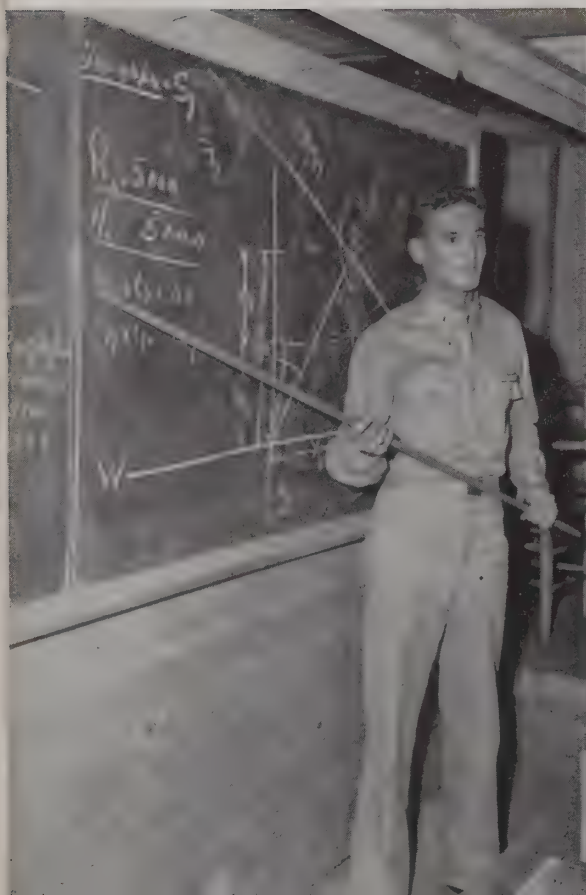

him learning to sweep
the skies with his giant searchlights in search of the foe . . . a lot of
learning to be crammed into twelve short weeks.

CLASS WORK

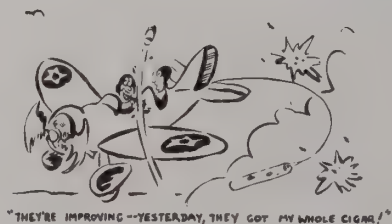

Once he has become acclimated to his new surroundings—something he has to do quickly—he is enmeshed in class-work. Study, class, demonstrations, more classes, more study routine of the school. He won't have much time for anything else. It's a day and night job.

He learns about small arms, pinches his fingers on the bolt action of the rifles, he sweats to master the automatic weapons, the 40, the 50 and the machine gun, but he learns.

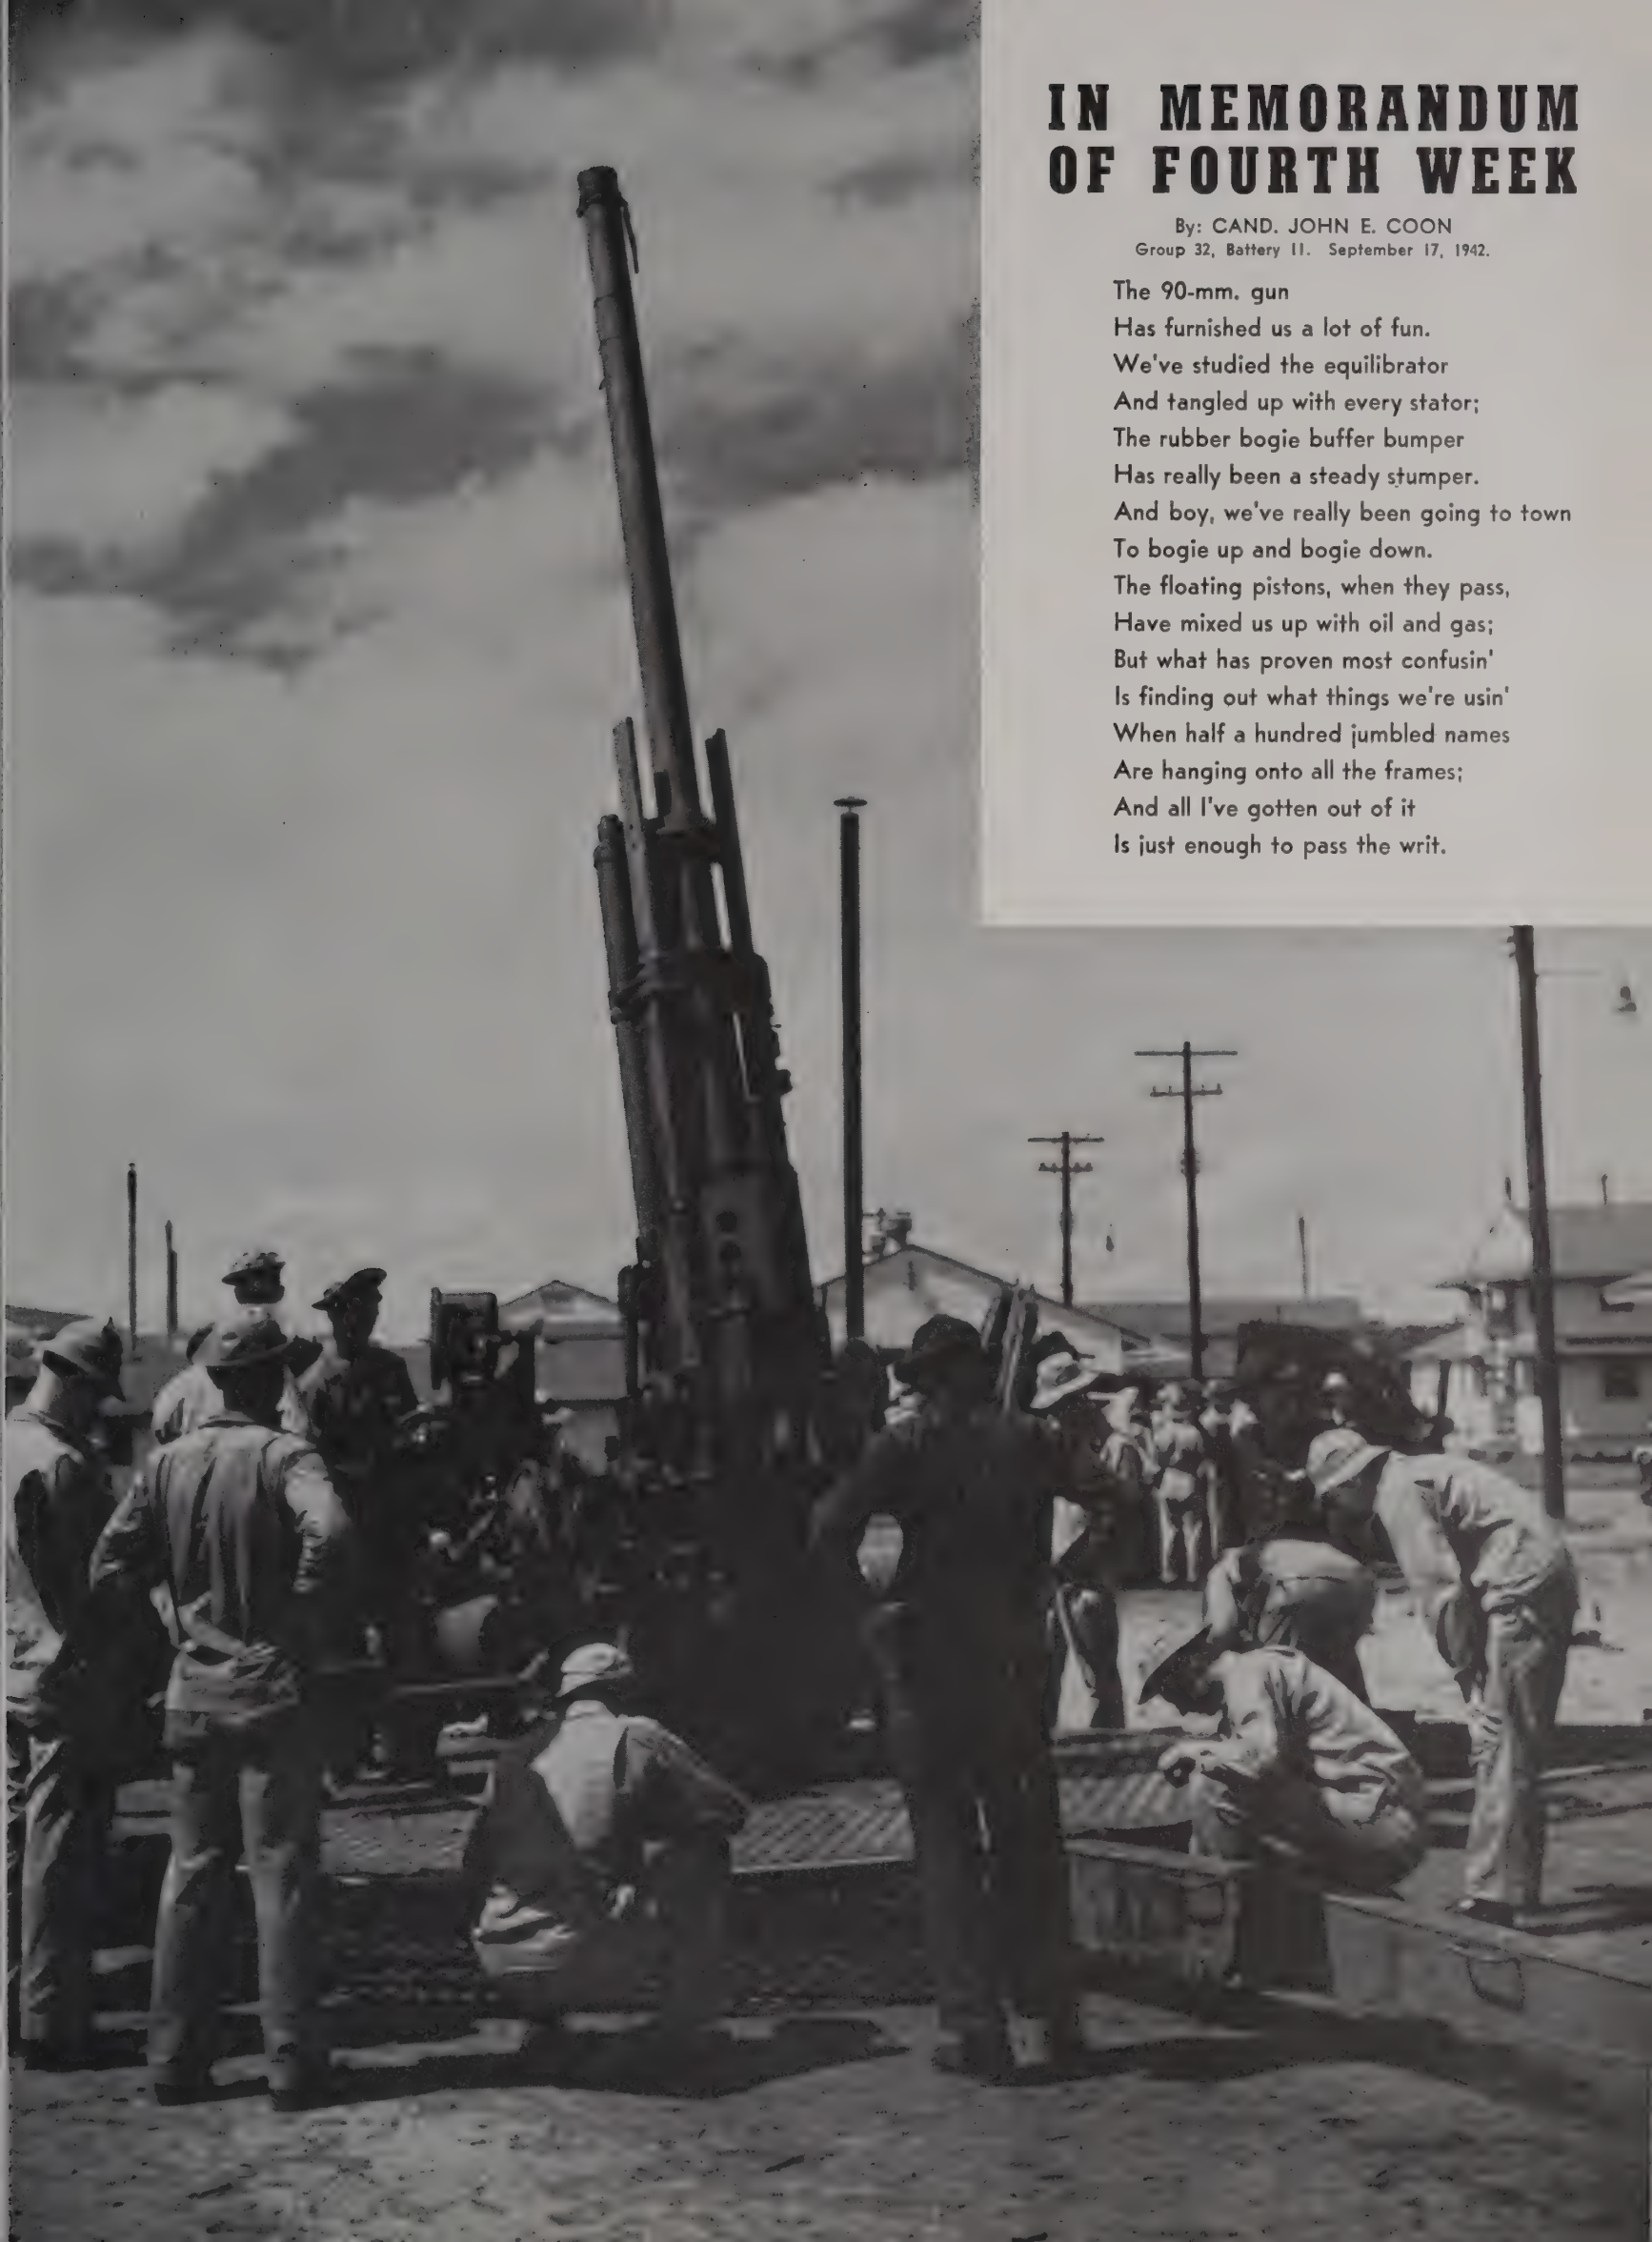

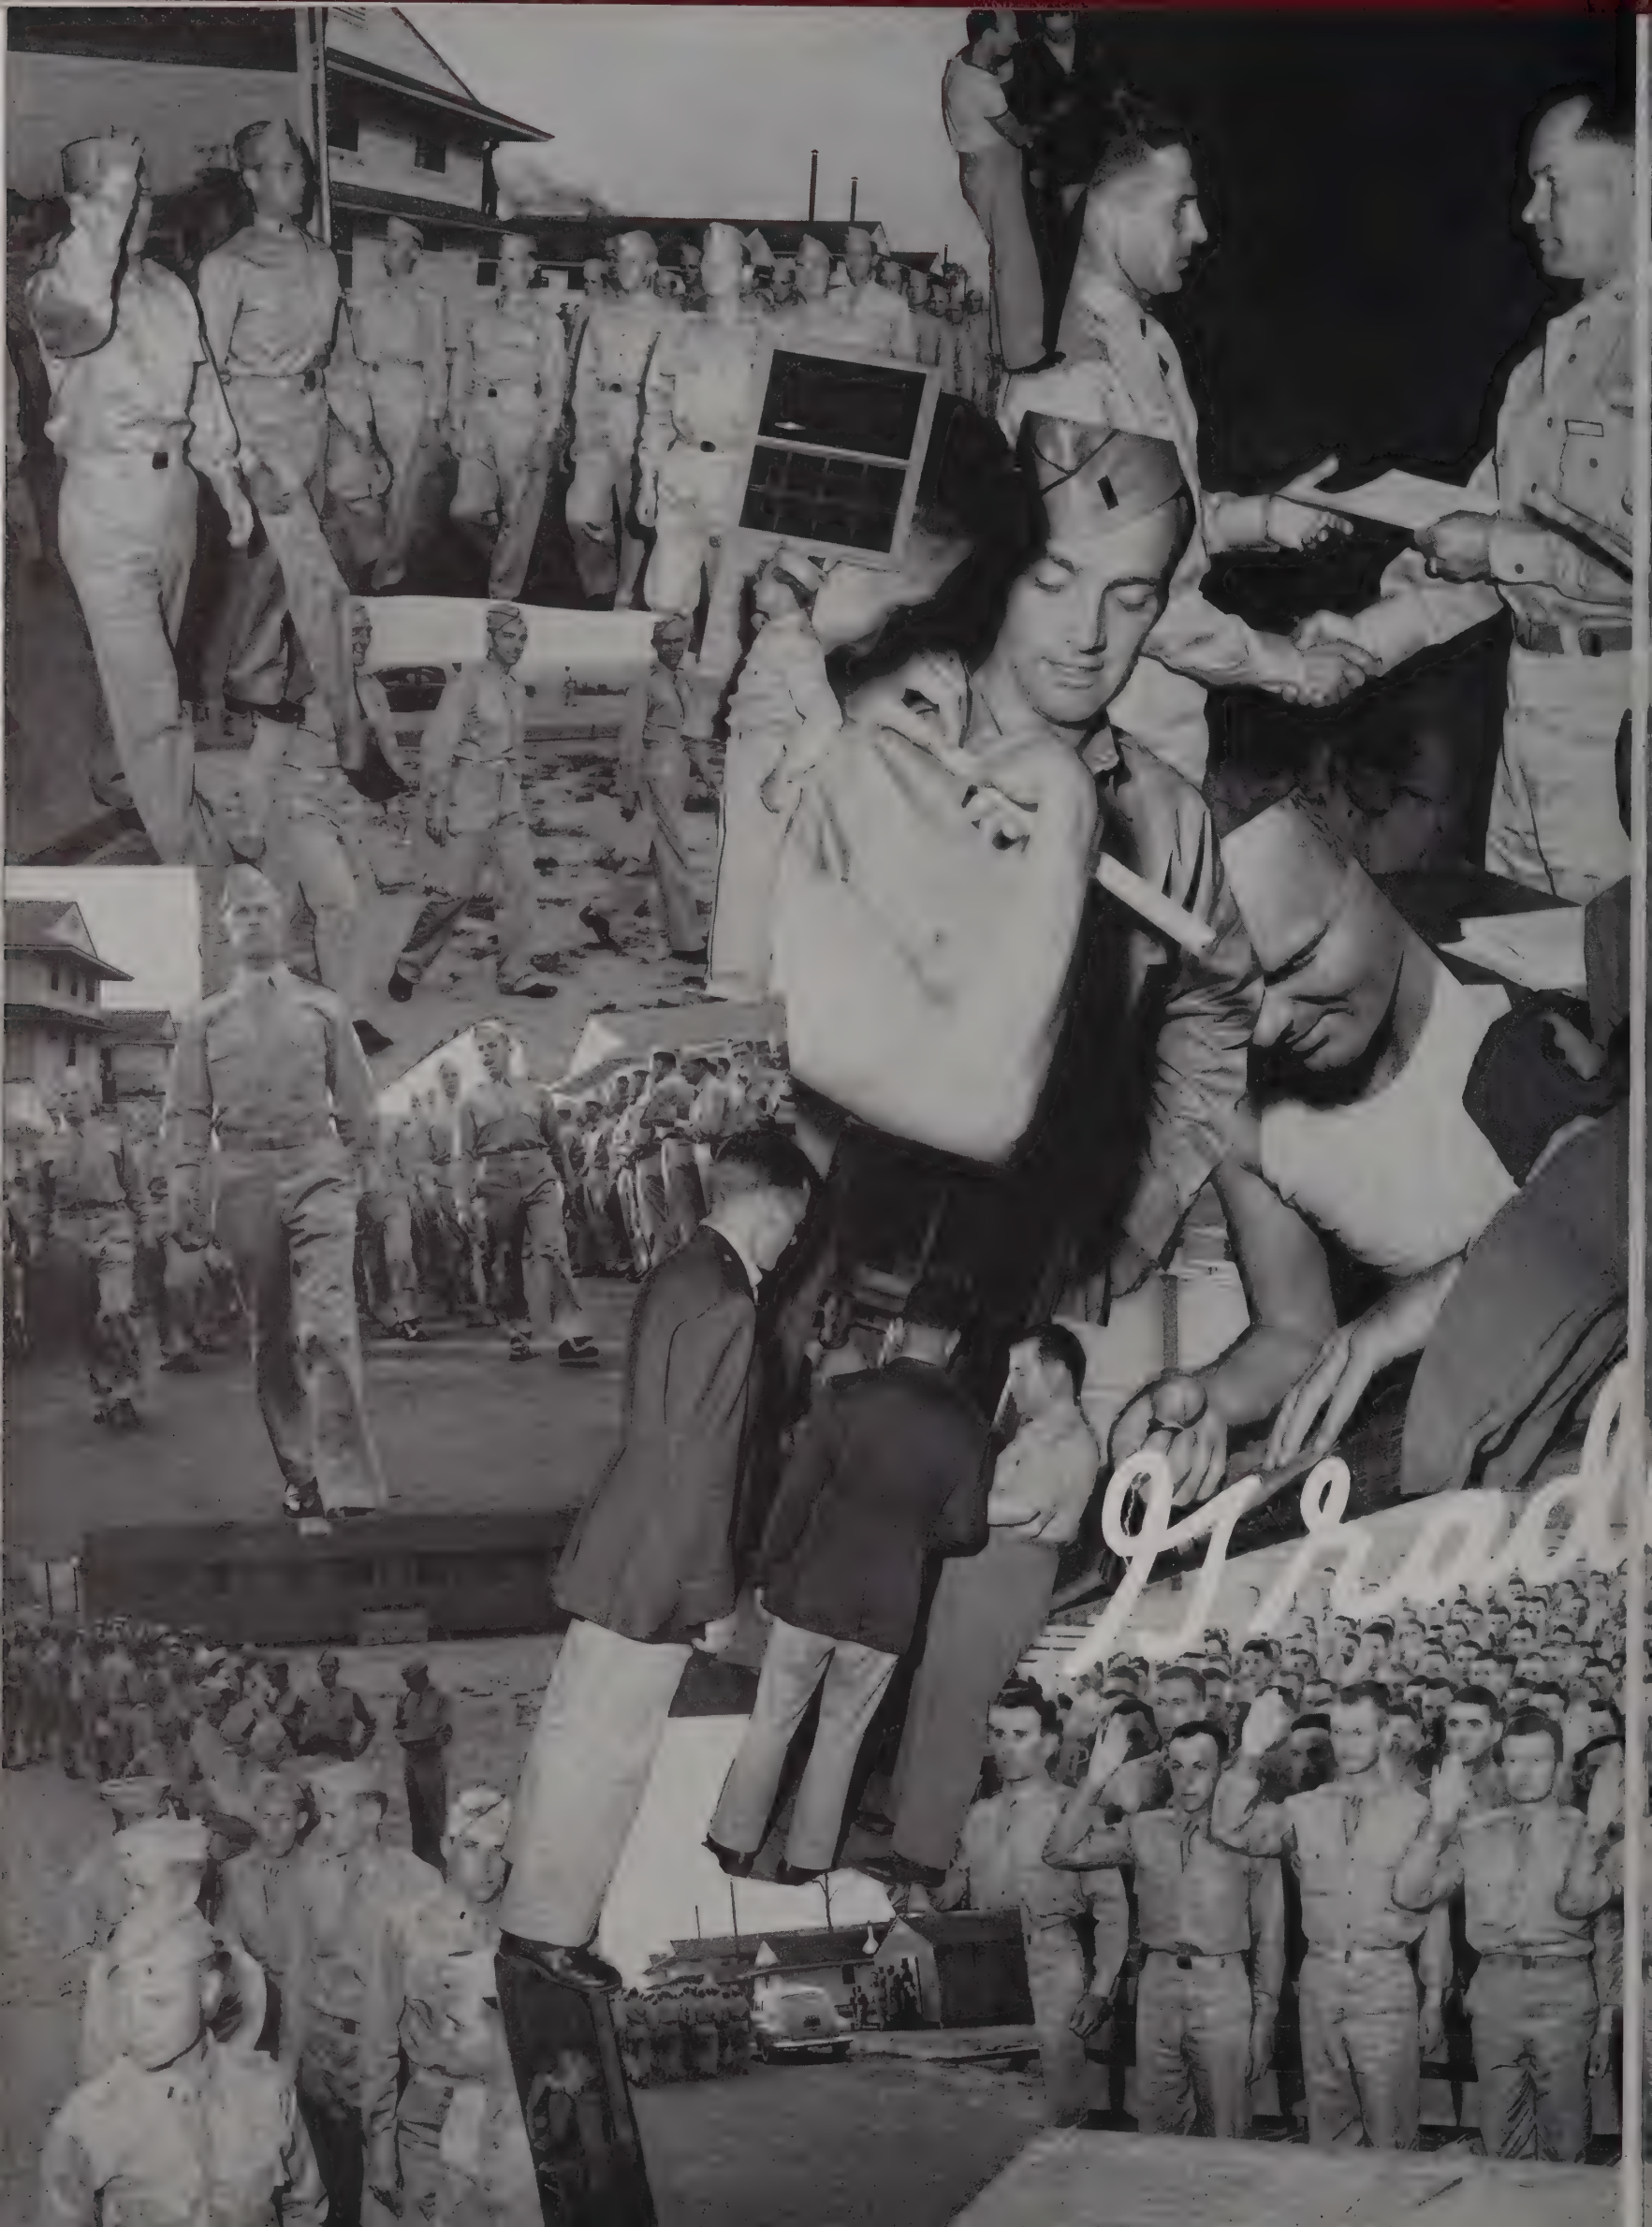

He will spend many hours on the sand dunes of the firing range, sweating as he pumps shell into his piece. He learns about horizontal fire, about vertical fire, about emplacements. Above all he learns how to handle the crews of the fast guns that pump a lethal greeting into the sky at any hostile aircraft.

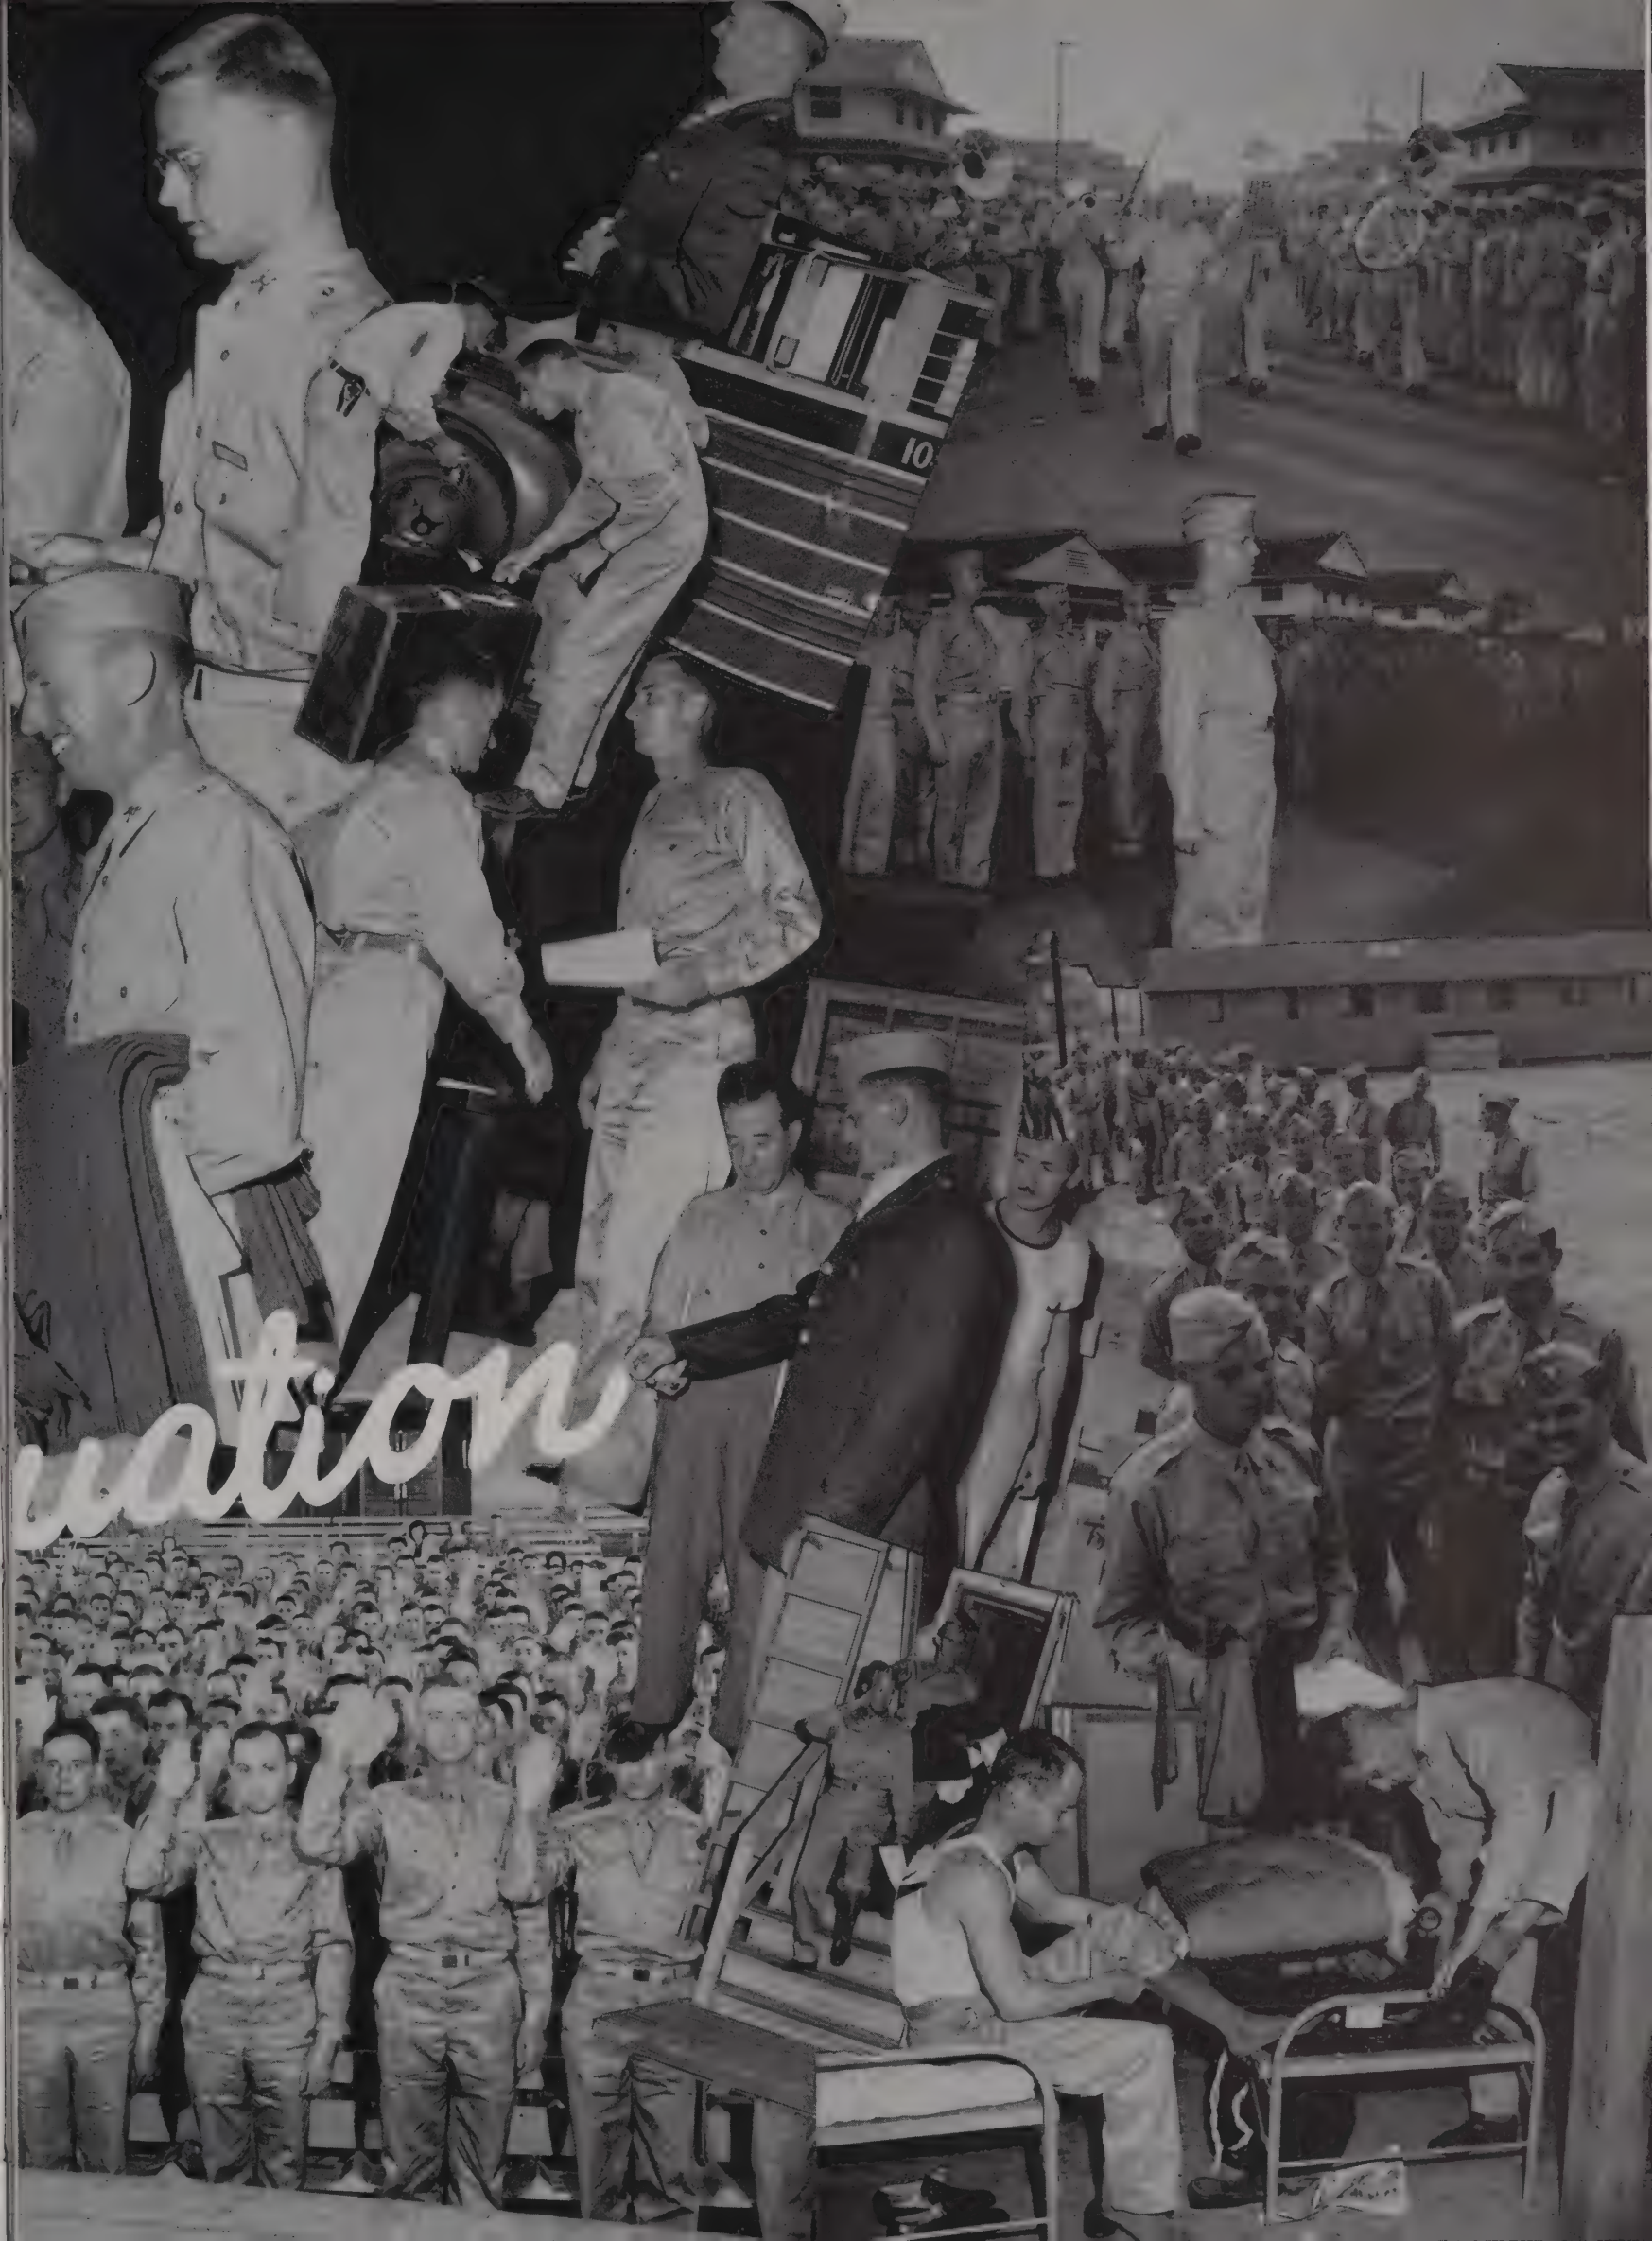

IN MEMORANDUM OF FOURTH WEEK

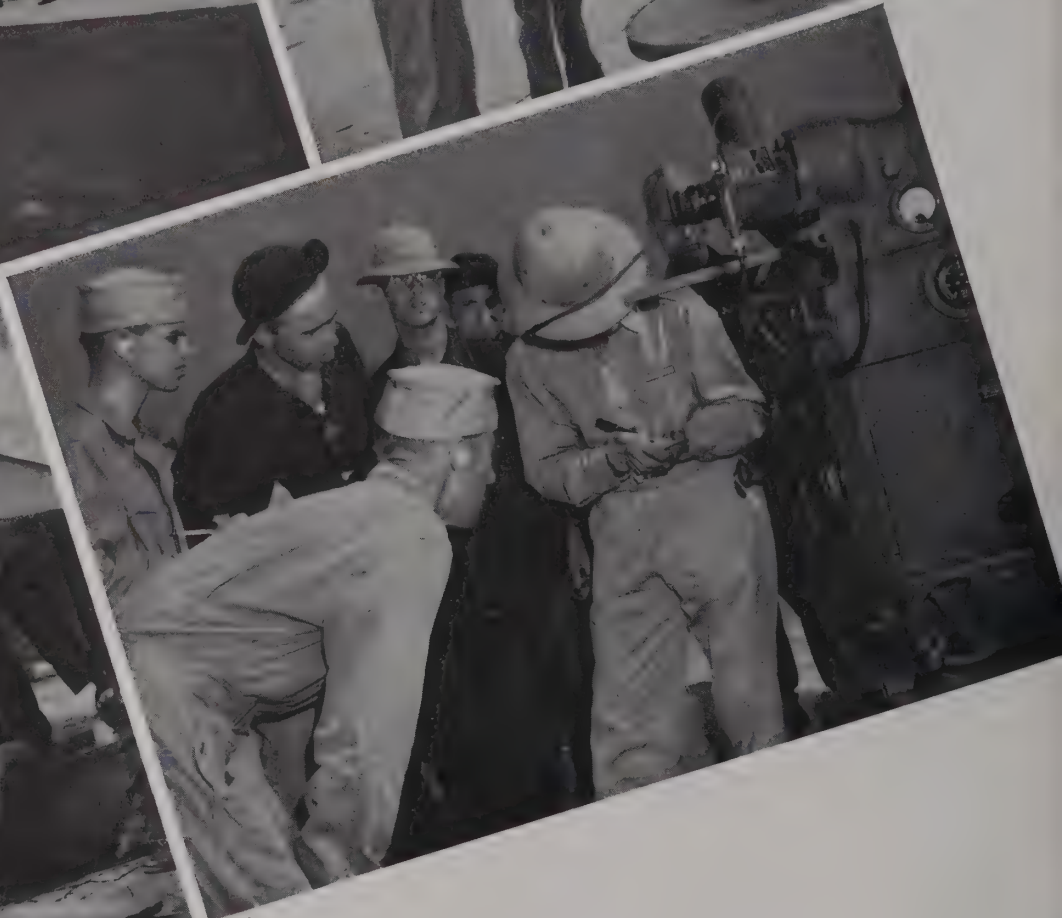

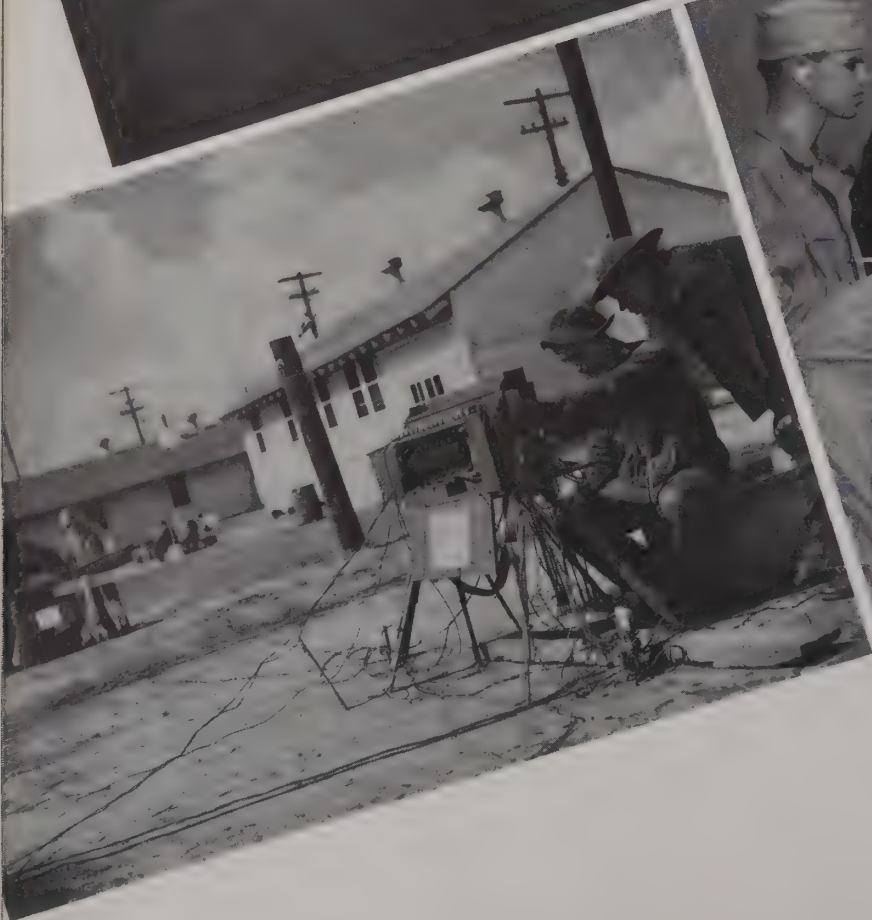

By: CAND. JOHN E. COON
Group 32, Battery 11. September 17, 1942.

The 90-mm. gun
Has furnished us a lot of fun.
We've studied the equilibrator
And tangled up with every stator;
The rubber bogie buffer bumper
Has really been a steady stumper.
And boy, we've really been going to town
To bogie up and bogie down.
The floating pistons, when they pass,
Have mixed us up with oil and gas;
But what has proven most confusin'
Is finding out what things we're usin'
When half a hundred jumbled names
Are hanging onto all the frames;
And all I've gotten out of it
Is just enough to pass the writ.

Then there is the wide variety of appurtenances to anti-aircraft warfare to be learned, the height finders, transit traverse, sound detectors, searchlights, these and many more. Fathoming the intricacies of these various mechanisms makes the life of an OCS candidate no bed of roses, it's a grind, but worth it.

It is not all work though. There is the relaxation that comes at 9 p.m. after study hall when he rushes to the PX with his buddies for a smoke, a drink and a chat before lights out. There is the comradeship of the marches together, the fun of the recreation area at Wrightsville Beach, life with a lot of good fellows. All in all, the days pass swiftly with ever the vision of the two gold bars dancing before him.
